EPITOME OF THE HISTORY

OF THE

UNION LITERARY SOCIETY OF HANOVER COLLEGE.

FOUNDED DECEMBER 10TH, 1830.

In publishing a Catalogue of our Society, it was thought proper to insert an outline of her history, a brief sketch of her career from her origin to the present time. To those who have no special interest in her welfare, or in tracing the varied scenes of her progress, such a narration may be deemed unimportant and tedious. But those who have gathered in her walls, as members of a fraternal league, those who have rallied around her shrine, in the bonds of brotherly love, and have gone on together in the great contest for excellence, will regard these statistics with far different feelings. To those of her members, who are scattered far and wide throughout the length and breadth of our Union, whose footsteps long since have ceased to echo in her halls, and whose voices no longer ring within her sacred precincts, may these pages come as a cherished token of the past; as a memento of the days that are gone, calling up from "the dim and shadowy recesses of the past" the thrilling associations of their early youth. To these, and to those who are yet bearing onward her glorious banner, the perusal of these pages will afford a satisfaction, pure and unalloyed, which the memory of the scenes in which they have engaged while beneath the fostering care of their "alma mater," will but serve to increase. A few remarks in regard to the early history of Hanover College, may not be deemed improper, intimately connected as it is with that of our Society.

The institution of learning with which the Union Literary Society is connected, was founded in the year 1829. The remarkable healthiness of the village, its wild and romantic scenery, its seclusion from the more busy and stirring scenes of life, and the high tone of moral feeling which pervaded the community, seemed highly favorable to the location of an institution of learning at Hanover. The general intelligence of the community at large, also operated favorably to this design. The Rev. Dr. Crowe, then pastor of the Church, had taken under his instruction a small class of pupils, engaged in the study of the Latin language. This was the only school of the kind in the place; yet this little Latin school was the "nucleus" of Hanover College. Here was the foundation of that institution, which was destined to exert such a wide-spread influence upon the educational interests of the "Great West." Here was the first outgushing of that fountain, whose pure limpid waters so many have been permitted to taste. To extend the opportunities of acquiring a liberal education, a school was soon after established by the Rev. Dr. Crowe upon a broad and liberal policy. Under the management of this gentleman, so well qualified for the undertaking, not only by the advantages of a finished education, but by the many excellent qualities of heart, and the gentlemanly deportment which have ever distinguished him, the "Academy" was soon in a flourishing condition. The number of students in attendance did not perhaps exceed twenty-two; but these for the most part were characterized by energy, enterprise, and intelligence. Such was the state of affairs when the Union Literary Society first sprang into existence.

On Friday, December 2d, 1830, the students of Hanover Academy assembled for the purpose of forming two Literary Associations. In order that this might be effected in the most amicable and satisfactory manner, Messrs. Samuel S. Lattimore and John M. McChord were appointed a committee to divide the students into two classes, equally, both as to talent and numbers. On Saturday, December 3d, this committee reported, and the class consisting of Messrs. Samuel S. Lattimore, Charles K. Thompson, Wm. H. Bruner, John Stevenson, Eli Semple, James Brown, W. W. Frizzell, Blackburn Lefler, and Rowland T. Scott, nine in number, was resolved into a Society, and a committee was appointed to draft a Constitution and By-Laws.

On Friday, December 10th, the committee having reported, the Constitution was adopted, the association being designated as the Union Literary Society, bearing the motto, "Vis unitate est." Although the number of students in attendance at the Academy was small, yet the fraternal feeling in which they were united was unusual and surprising. Personal enmities were unknown. Few if any causes of momentary bickerings existed, while the numerous sources of pleasure were tasted by all, and the whole company seemed rather a band of brothers, than a set of recent, casual, and changing acquaintances. It was at this period usually regarded as the "golden age" of Hanover College, that the Union Literary Society was founded; and certainly a more auspicious period could scarcely have been selected. Some time afterwards, an association was formed, composed of all the members from each Society, which met annually on the second Monday in March. It had its origin in the fraternity of feeling to which allusion has been made, and was designed as a kind of mutual covenant, a common ground, and to prevent the intervention of party spirit, or insidious rivalry. This association was designated "The General Society." Its existence, however, was destined to be but of short duration. Causes of dissatisfaction having arisen, this confederacy was dissolved by mutual consent, March 9th, 1832. Mutual good feeling seemed, however, to be preserved between the two Societies. No causes of discord existed, and each exhibited and extended that courtesy which was due one deliberative body from another. The career of the Union Literary Society so far had been marked with success: yet success did not render her members indolent, or less watchful of her interests. And though success crowned their efforts, yet their pathway was not all strewn with flowers. The fewness of their numbers, and the innumerable difficulties by which they were surrounded, caused each member to feel his individual responsibility, and they were closely united in their efforts to surpass their rivals, if possible. During the administration of Mr. Charles K. Thompson—the first President of the Society—no incident is recorded as having for a moment varied “the even tenor of their way.” The members had all embarked in an enterprise which was new to them, and they were as yet too uncertain respecting the issue of the event, to pause in their work to excite difficulties for the purpose of testing the strength of their form of government. On the 14th of January, 1831, the Society chose the following members to represent them at their first Exhibition, viz.: Charles K. Thompson, W. W. Frizzell, John Stevenson, Jesse Mavity, and Samuel S. Lattimore. This exhibition was held jointly with the Philosophronian Society. The progress of the Society began henceforth to be more rapid and sure. Her members began to look forward with brighter hopes for the future eminence and prosperity of their association. Their number was considerably increased by the addition of members of talent and enterprise, and their affairs moved on smoothly and harmoniously, with scarce an interruption. Thus things progressed until the dissolution of the “General Society,” March 9th, 1832.

Soon after this event, a third Society was formed, composed of a few members who had seceded from the Union Literary and Philosophronian Societies. The reasons for this step were submitted to the Societies, which reasons were considered satisfactory. Four of these gentlemen, viz., Messrs. Jno. Jenkins, Blackburn Lefler, Jno. Burlew Conover, and Wm. H. Bruner, were members of the U. L. Society. The new Society was entitled “Christomathean,” but this was soon afterwards exchanged for the less classic, and more laconic one of “Whig,” with the motto, “Genius, like the Eagle, is free.” This Society, strengthened by the addition of others to its ranks, soon assumed a respectable station with its sister associations. During the winter session of 1833, the U. L. Society was created a body corporate by the Legislature of Indiana. This was a fresh stimulus to the exertions of her members. Hitherto they had labored under almost every disadvantage. They had encountered the difficulties incident to every new enterprise of the kind, with no official assistance. They were without a hall, and were holding their meetings in the village Church, which subjected them to many inconveniences. Feeling the want of that dignity and solidity of character, enjoyed by regularly organized incorporated assemblies, they had still struggled on, relying on the strength of that fraternal feeling, which had always actuated them, and that high aspiration for mental culture, cherished in each bosom. They were now regularly chartered, and it was not long until they received permission from the Board of Trustees of Hanover College, to occupy the upper story of the new wing of the College edifice, as a hall. They were now enabled to collect their furniture, their books, &c. and to proceed in a more regular and systematic manner. In January, 1834, the Constitution and By-Laws were revised. The motto, “Vis unitate est,” was expunged, and “φως και φρων” adopted in its stead. At this period the affairs of the Society were in a condition truly felicitous. Its increase in numbers, wealth and enterprise, was unparalleled, and in public character, concentration of talent, and unity of effort, challenging competition with the most celebrated Western Literary Societies.

The ceremony of publicly dismissing Mr. Charles K. Thompson, the first graduate of the Society, took place on the 24th of September, 1834, which was the first commencement of Hanover College. The presentation of the diploma, with the address, was by Jonathan Edwards, Esq., a member of the Society.

From this time on, the Society made rapid advances. During the two or three years succeeding, no circumstances occurred which materially affected her career. She was now established on a firm and sure basis, and nothing remained but to guide the ship aright to ensure for her a prosperous voyage and safe haven. Hanover College was now in a condition highly prosperous, and seemed fully to realize the most sanguine expectations of her patrons and friends.

An incident occurred in the summer of 1837, which is worthy of record. On the evening of Wednesday, July 5th, a dreadful tornado swept over the village, laying a portion in ruins, and destroying a considerable part of the property. The College edifice was much injured, though not entirely destroyed. The Union Literary Hall was situated in that portion of the building which suffered, and consequently was demolished, with its entire furniture. For some time after this truly disastrous accident, the Society held her meetings in the village school house. However, she did not long remain in this position. When the College building was repaired, a hall was fitted up for the use of the members, and accordingly they removed the furniture which they had collected to their new place of meeting. This was fitted up in a neat and comfortable manner, and things soon progressed as before. Each year the Society sent out a respectable number of graduates, who usually did honor to themselves and the Society in their respective addresses. But the greatest disaster which had ever befallen the Society took place during the year 1843.

The Rev. Erasmus D. McMaster, D. D., was at this time President of Hanover College. Dr. McMaster saw proper to remove the College to Madison, Ind., Dec. 1843. The Union Literary Society was also removed with the College, together with her furniture, library, &c. After the removal of the College, those who had been most warmly opposed to the measure, and who were unwilling that the village of Hanover should remain destitute of an institution of learning, were resolved to build up a school, if this could be effected by any efforts on their part. The prospects of success, at first, seemed dark and gloomy. The removal of the College seemed the death blow of educational interests at Hanover. But the friends were resolved never to give up in despair. They were determined to establish a school upon the ruins of the former College. A school was accordingly begun under the title of the "Hanover Collegiate Institute," and the Rev. Dr. Crowe, formerly Vice President of Hanover College, was installed as Principal. Few as were the students in attendance, the institution struggled on bravely. Her friends did not forsake her in this critical position, but they stood up nobly in her defence. Through the labors of Dr. Crowe, and a few others, the aspect of things began again to look brighter, and hope sprang up afresh in the hearts of those interested in her welfare. Dr. McMaster having accepted the President's chair at Miami University, the institution at Madison rapidly declined, until finally it ceased to exist. In the mean time, those members of the Union Literary Society who had remained with the institution at Hanover determined to re-organize their Society. Accordingly, several of them assembled in the old hall, March 27th, 1844, for that purpose, among whom were Messrs. Jas. Y. Allison, Thomas S. Dunn, Charles H. Chamberlain, Wm. R. Hays, John M. Lattimore, John Treadway, and William P. Saunders. After a committee had been appointed to draft the constitution and by-laws, the Society resolved itself into a committee of the whole to collect books for the library, and to fit up the hall for the meetings of the Society; after which the Society adjourned till the first Friday in the following session. In the meantime, each member put forth his utmost exertion. Each one felt that he himself had something to do, and did not depend on his fellow to perform his part. By the commencement of the summer session, the hall was neatly fitted up, and a considerable number of books were collected. Subsequently the Library was recovered from Madison, together with the records of the Society. It was during this spring that the Society held no exhibition, which was in consequence of the removal to Madison. At the close of the summer session, Sept. 24th, there was an exhibition of the Academy composed of representatives from each Society. There were two representatives from the U. L. Society on this occasion, viz: W. R. Marshall and Charles H. Chamberlain.

On the same occasion an oration was delivered before the U. L. Society by Jno. L. Scott, Esq., of Cincinnati, formerly a member of the Society. In the following year, 1845, the institution was re-chartered as "Hanover College." Since that time, the Union Literary Society has been steadily advancing in her career, with nothing to mar the peaceful quietude of her pathway. She has sent forth from her members fifty-four graduates, many of whom are now filling important public stations, in almost every portion of the Union. Many of her under-graduates have also gone forth to engage in public life, fully sustaining the honor of their Society, and of themselves as individuals.

The Society numbers at the present time fifty-five members, and sustains as favorable a position, perhaps, as at any time hitherto. The Society has a comfortable and neatly furnished hall, and an excellent library of twelve hundred volumes. The annual meetings of the Society are held at each College Commencement, in the Union Literary Hall, where there is an gathering of many of her sons from various parts of our great and growing country.

Such is an outline of the history of the Union Literary Society, from her foundation to the present time. We have endeavored—but feebly and imperfectly—to "shadow forth" the delineation of her character, and the principal events of her career. "That career, as we have seen, has been rapid, upward and honorable; that character marked by energy, liberality, and dignity."

Long may she thus continue, a source of improvement to her members, and an honor to the institution with which she is connected.

UNION LITERARY SOCIETY.

The following is a list of the members of the Union Literary Society from December, 1830, to August, 1850. The occupations of many of the members could not be ascertained. The present residences, so far as known, are in italics; and where these are unknown, the residences at the time of connexion with the Society, are given. * Denotes decease. The Society confers diplomas upon her graduates, and grants letters of honorable dismission to those who desire them.

ANNUAL EXHIBITIONS.

The following list contains the names and the subjects of those members who have represented the Society at each annual exhibition, with the exception of the first two. We have been unable to procure the subjects for the exhibitions of 1831-32. The Society holds her annual exhibitions in the College chapel, during the latter part of March. The chapel is beautifully decorated with wreaths of pine and cedar, on these occasions, and splendidly illuminated. The services of the "Appolonian Band" are generally secured, and the exercises are enlivened by a variety of good music.

COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The seventeenth annual commencement of Hanover College will be held in the College Chapel, on Thursday, August 15th, 1850. Exercises to commence at 10 o'clock, A. M. The Anniversary orations before the Literary Societies will be delivered on Wednesday, the 14th. The graduating class numbers fourteen, seven of whom are members of the U. L. Society. The anniversary orators are gentlemen of established talent. The Union Literary Society would cordially invite all of her old members, wherever they may be, to favor us with their presence on this occasion. Those who may wish to visit once more the romantic scenery around our quiet little village, and to ramble once again amid the haunts of their college days, are assured of the warmest and most hearty reception. The annual meeting of the Society will be held in the Union Literary hall on Thursday, the 15th, at 8 o'clock, A. M. The annual Address will be given by A. L. Holcombe, Esq., of Madison, Ind.
